

jolabokafloð

An Icelandic tradition that translates into English as "the Christmas book flood." It began in World War II, when paper was not rationed in this book-loving country. Icelanders give book gifts to each other on Christmas Eve and celebrate the holidays by reading them with a glass of hot chocolate.

